

KEEP IT CLEAN

"Traditionally, the [condo] buildings were not so modern. Now, we're fortunately getting, I think, some exciting new modern buildings, so allow some of the furniture to be modern and clean. I like to make my homes very beautiful, but I also like to make them very livable: a place where people can go swimming and feel like they can come back in and sit on the couch."

"Even if you're up high above the sky, you should feel like you have the ocean, and you're a part of it."

STAY IN HARMONY

"I try to bring in textures, so it's that balance of organic [and inorganic]. For example, I did a driftwood mirror to go with the glass tabletop to balance the elements. In these two cases, the colors are all pretty muted, because I think the outside is just so brilliant. I try not to compete with the blue, but to harmonize with it and then throw in the accents. The opposite of blue on the color wheel is orange, so complimentary coral colors really work well with the blues outside."

Sky's

the

limit

Jamie Jackson dishes on décor dos for high-rise living.

as told to HILUXURY TEAM •
photography by OLIVIER KONING

Step right up. Turning a standard condo into a gilded sanctuary is no strange feat for Jamie Jackson, design director and owner of Jamie Jackson Design, whose mood board—living, moving Pinterest boards—originated interiors explore the luxurious side of condominium life in the Pacific. With a fresh clan of ultrachic condos popping up along the waterfront, we sought out Jackson herself for insight on how to live large a few levels up.

BETRANSLUCENT

"I think the most important thing is to let the outside in. In both of these (pictured: Hokua and Gold Coast condos conceptualized by Jackson), I was thinking translucency. I chose chairs that are translucent. When you walk in this condo, you see this ocean. It's incredible! We didn't want to stop the ocean: We wanted to bring the ocean in. The table's translucent—it just shimmers!—so it's not competing with the outside but treating it almost like a home in the clouds."

www.jamiejacksondesign.com

modern. classic. italian.

arancino
at The Kahala

